IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

PAULA BLAIR, ANDREA ROBINSON, and FALECHIA HARRIS, individually and on behalf of all others similarly situated,

No. C 17-02335 WHA

Plaintiffs,

v.

ORDER RE MOTION TO COMPEL ARBITRATION,
STRIKE CLASS ACTION
CLAIMS, AND STAY PROCEEDINGS

RENT-A-CENTER, INC., a Delaware corporation, RENT-A-CENTER WEST, INC., a Delaware corporation, and DOES 1–50, inclusive,

Defendants.

INTRODUCTION

In this putative consumer class action, defendant corporations move to compel arbitration, stay court proceedings, and strike class action claims. Plaintiffs oppose. For the reasons herein, defendants’ motion to compel arbitration is GRANTED IN PART and DENIED IN PART. Defendants’ motions to strike one plaintiff’s class action claims is GRANTED. Defendants’ motion to stay is DENIED.

STATEMENT

This action arises from rent-to-own agreements, which plaintiffs Paula Blair, Andrea Robinson, and Falechia Harris contend set prices in excess of the maximum installment payment rates allowable under California law.

1 Defendants Rent-A-Center, Inc., and Rent-A-Center West, Inc. (collectively “RAC”)
2 own and manage rent-to-own stores throughout California, which rent household merchandise 3 (e.g., appliances, electronics, furniture) to consumers for a weekly, bi-weekly, or monthly fee.
4 After a specified time period, if all payments have been made the consumer will own the 5 merchandise. These agreements also set forth a cash price at which consumers can purchase the 6 item outright before the rent-to-own period has ended (Sec. Amd. Compl. ¶¶ 11–13).

7 The terms of these rent-to-own agreements are set forth in written contracts between the 8 consumer and RAC, which are signed by the consumer at the point of sale. The consumer is 9 also given a separate arbitration agreement when she makes a purchase, which she is likewise 10 asked to sign (id. ¶¶ 11–13, 59).

11 Plaintiff Blair signed an arbitration agreement in connection with her 2015 purchase of a 12 window-unit air conditioner, which is the document from which RAC’s motion to compel 13 arbitration arises. RAC has not been able to locate signed arbitration agreements for either of 14 the other two named plaintiffs, and they are therefore not subject to the motion to compel.
15 Moreover, plaintiff Blair entered into a second agreement with RAC in 2016, but in connection 16 with that purchase opted out of arbitration, so that agreement is likewise not subject to RAC’s 17 motion to compel (id. ¶¶ 41, 47, 59–64, 68–69; Exhs. 30; Dkt. No. 54 at 1).

18 Blair’s 2015 arbitration agreement provided that either party may elect to arbitrate 19 “claims arising under, arising out of, or relating in any way to any Consumer Contract,” or 20 “claims that are based on any legal theory whatsoever, including . . . any statute, regulation or 21 ordinance” (Dkt. No. 22-1 ¶ B). In a subsection entitled “Requirement of Individual 22 Arbitration” the agreement provided that, in the event arbitration is selected, it “shall be 23 conducted on an individual basis” and that “[t]here will be no right or authority for any dispute 24 to be brought, heard, or arbitrated as a class, collective, mass, private attorney general, or 25 representative action” (id. ¶ D). The agreement delegated interpretation of the validity of the 26 paragraph requiring individual arbitration to a court, and provided that “any such court 27 challenge shall be governed by the law of the customer’s mailing address” — here, California 28 law (ibid.; Sec. Amd. Compl. ¶ 3). “If there is a final judicial determination that applicable law

1 precludes enforcement of [the individual arbitration paragraph’s] limitations as to a particular 2 claim for relief, then that claim (and only that claim) must be severed from the arbitration and 3 may be brought in court” (Dkt. No. 22-1 ¶ D). Plaintiff Blair filed this action in the 4 Superior Court for the County of Alameda in April 2017 seeking relief for violations of (1) the 5 Karnette Rental-Purchase Act, (2) the California Consumers Legal Remedies Act (“CLRA”), 6 (3) Usury, (4) Section 17200 of the California Business and Professions Code, and (5) Unjust
7 Enrichment. RAC then removed the action to federal court pursuant to the Class Action 8 Fairness Act. In May, Blair filed an amended complaint dropping her unjust enrichment claim.
9 RAC then brought the instant motion to compel Blair’s suit to arbitration, to strike the class 10 action claims arising from her 2015 agreement, and to stay Blair’s claims arising from her 2016 11 purchase (from which she opted out of arbitration). While this motion has been pending, Blair 12 amended her complaint a second time to add plaintiffs Robinson and Harris, though as stated, 13 RAC has not moved to compel their claims to arbitration. This order follows full briefing and 14 oral argument.

15 ANALYSIS

16 1. ARBITRATION AGREEMENT.

17 RAC's motion to compel arbitration is governed by the Federal Arbitration Act. The 18 FAA requires the resolution of two “gateway” issues: (1) whether a valid agreement to arbitrate 19 exists and, if it does, (2) whether the agreement encompasses the dispute at issue. Howsam v.
20 Dean Witter Reynolds, Inc., 537 U.S. 79, 84 (2002). If a valid arbitration clause exists, 21 arbitration is mandatory. But, like other contracts, arbitration clauses “may be invalidated by 22 generally applicable contract defenses, such as fraud, duress, or unconscionability.”
23 Rent-A-Ctr., West, Inc. v. Jackson, 561 U.S. 63, 68 (2010) (citations and quotations omitted).

24 One such contract defense is that “a law established for a public reason cannot be 25 contravened by a private agreement.” McGill v. Citibank, N.A., 2 Cal. 5th 945, 962 (2017) 26 (citations and quotations omitted). McGill found that an arbitration agreement, which 27 prohibited plaintiffs from seeking a public injunction — a remedy provided for under certain 28

1 California consumer protection laws — was invalid because it “seriously compromise[d] the 2 public purposes [the laws] were intended to serve.” Ibid.

3 Blair argues that under McGill, her claims, each of which seek public injunctive relief, 4 cannot be waived pursuant to an arbitration agreement. Since paragraph D of the arbitration 5 agreement purports to waive these claims, she argues, that provision must be invalidated, and, 6 according to the terms of the agreement, the claims must be litigated in court.

7 Blair’s argument presents three questions: first, whether her claims carry statutorily-8 imposed injunctive remedies such that they fall within the scope of McGill, second whether 9 McGill is preempted by the FAA, and third, whether the RAC arbitration agreement prohibits 10 Blair from seeking a public injunction in any forum, and is therefore invalid under McGill.

11 A. Statutory Public Injunctive Relief.

12 Blair’s claims all seek a “public injunction” on behalf of the people of California (Sec.
13 Amd. Compl. ¶¶ 89, 96, 104; Prayer ¶ 1). Merely declaring that a claim seeks a public 14 injunction, however, is not sufficient to bring that claim within the bounds of the rule set forth 15 in McGill. Rather, McGill limited invalidity to claims which confer by statute the right to seek 16 a public injunction.

17 To determine whether a statute provides for public injunctive relief, McGill considered 18 whether it has a public purpose, and, in turn, whether, in crafting the law, the California 19 legislature provided that a private individual could seek an injunction that would “by and large 20 benefit[] the general public and [] benefit[] the plaintiff, if at all, only incidentally and/or as a 21 member of the general public.” Id. at 955 (citations and quotations omitted). McGill found that 22 the CLRA, Section 17200 of the California Business and Professions Code, and the California 23 False Advertising Law all provide for public injunctive relief, and therefore a plaintiff’s right to 24 seek an injunction pursuant to these laws cannot be waived through an arbitration agreement.
25 Id. at 954–55.

26 Drawing upon two earlier California Supreme Court decisions — Cruz v. PacifiCare
27 Health Systems, Inc., 30 Cal. 4th 303 (2003), and Broughton v. Cigna Healthplans, 21 Cal. 4th 28 1066 (2003) — McGill articulated certain common features of the statutes it was analyzing that

1 brought them within the “public injunction” exception. As an initial matter, each expressly 2 provided for injunctive relief. McGill, 2 Cal. 5th at 965; see Cal. Civ. Code § 1770; Cal. Bus. & 3 Prof. Code § 17203 and § 17535.

4 Additionally, each contained provisions denoting its public purpose. In enacting the 5 CLRA, for example, the legislature stated that it “shall be liberally construed and applied to 6 promote its underlying purposes, which are to protect consumers against unfair and deceptive 7 business practices” Cal. Civ. Code § 1760. To that end, any waiver of its provisions, 8 including waiver of injunctive relief, “is contrary to public policy and shall be unenforceable 9 and void.” Id. § 1751. Similarly, Section 17200 was intended to “safeguard the public against .
 10 . . unfair, dishonest, deceptive, destructive fraudulent and discriminatory practices,” Cal. Bus. & 11 Prof. Code § 17001, and the False Advertising Law at Section 17500 prohibited “untrue or 12 misleading” statements designed to “induce the public to enter into any obligation” to purchase 13 goods and services. Moreover, McGill observed that both Section 17200 and the False 14 Advertising Law are enforceable not only by the individual who suffered injury, but also by 15 government officials who can seek injunctive relief on behalf of the public at large, further 16 demonstrating their public purpose. McGill, 2 Cal. 5th at 954-55; Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17 17204 and § 17535.

18 Finally, McGill observed, when a plaintiff seeks injunctive relief under these laws, their 19 benefits “by and large do not accrue to that party, but to the general public in danger of being 20 victimized by the same deceptive practices as the plaintiff suffered.” Broughton, 21 Cal. 4th 21 1066 at 1080. This is so “because the plaintiff has already been injured, allegedly, by such 22 practices and [is] aware of them.” McGill, 2 Cal. 5th at 955. The evident purpose of such relief, 23 therefore, “is not to resolve a private dispute, but to remedy a public wrong.” Broughton, 21 24 Cal. 4th at 1080. These features, McGill held, demonstrate the legislature’s intent to provide for 25 public injunctive relief.

26 Here, Blair seeks public injunctive relief under four laws: (1) Section 17200, (2) the 27 CLRA, (3) the Karnette Rental-Purchase Act, and (4) usury under Section 1(1) of Article XV of 28 the California Constitution. The first two were considered in McGill and the California

1 Supreme Court determined that they provided injunctive remedies that were by and large for the 2 benefit of the public, and as such could not be waived by contract. So too here.

3 The latter two require further analysis to determine whether they fall within the class of 4 public injunctive laws set forth in McGill. Applying the principles in McGill, this order finds 5 that the Karnette Rental-Purchase Act provides for public injunctive relief, whereas California's 6 usury law does not.

7 Like the laws considered in McGill, the Karenette Rental-Purchase Act has an 8 enumerated public purpose — to “ensure that consumers are protected from misrepresentations 9 and unfair dealings” and to “prohibit unfair or unconscionable conduct toward consumers in 10 connection with rental-purchase transactions.” See Cal. Civ. Code § 1812.621. A consumer 11 harmed by violation of this statute, in turn, is entitled to recover “[e]quitable relief as the court 12 deems proper” Id. § 1812.636, which includes injunctive relief. See Weinberger v.
13 Romero-Barcelo, 456 U.S. 305, 311 (1982) (“It goes without saying that an injunction is an 14 equitable remedy.”). Furthermore, the legislature has directed that the Act's provisions “shall 15 be liberally construed to achieve its remedial goals.” Id. § 1812.621. Accordingly, it is 16 properly within a court's discretion to grant a public injunction for violations of the Act.

17 Finally, like the statutes in McGill, any prospective injunctive relief herein under the 18 Karnette Rental-Purchase Act will accrue to the public at large and will affect Blair only 19 incidentally as she has already been harmed by the allegedly wrongful practice. See McGill, 2 20 Cal. 5th at 955. Based on the foregoing, therefore, Blair is within her rights to seek public 21 injunctive relief under the Karnette Rental-Purchase Act.

22 Usury, on the other hand, is not amenable to public injunctive relief. The legislature has 23 not provided an injunctive remedy for a usury claim. Rather, the typical remedy for violation of 24 California's usury law is to reduce the interest on any loan to zero, and permit the borrower to 25 pay back only the principal. See Gibbo v. Berger, 123 Cal. App. 4th 396, 403 (2004); see also 26 Uncod. Measures 1919-3 at 51 (2004) (providing for discretionary award of treble damages for 27 violation of usury law). Moreover, the right of recovery “is personal, and is available only to 28 the debtor or his personal representative.” Commercial Credit Co. v. Semon, 33 F.2d 356, 357

1 (N.D. Cal. 1928). California’s usury law, therefore, does not fit within the exception
2 recognized by McGill.¹

3 In summary, Blair’s public injunctive claims under Section 17200, the CLRA, and the 4 Karnette Rental-Purchase Act fall within the scope of McGill. Blair’s usury claim, however, is 5 not amenable to public injunctive relief, and RAC did not run afoul of McGill by requiring that 6 Blair arbitrate this claims in her individual capacity only. Accordingly, RAC’s motion to 7 compel arbitration is GRANTED as to Blair’s usury claim.

8 B. McGill Is Not Preempted.

9 RAC next argues that McGill is preempted by the FAA, and Blair’s claims must 10 therefore be compelled to arbitration pursuant to the parties’ agreement.

11 RAC’s argument relies upon two authorities, neither of which controls here. RAC first 12 cites to Ferguson v. Corinthian Colleges, Inc., 733 F.3d 928, 935–36 (9th Cir. 2013), for the 13 proposition that McGill contravenes the pro-arbitration policy of the FAA, and is consequently 14 preempted (Reply at 3–4). Ferguson, however, is inapplicable here. In Ferguson, our court of 15 appeals held that California’s Broughton-Cruz rule, which prohibited parties from compelling 16 public injunctions to arbitration, was preempted by the FAA because such a rule disfavored 17 arbitration. 733 F.3d at 936. The instant action, however, deals not with a contract that 18 compels public injunctive claims to arbitration, but rather with a contract that would prohibit 19 litigating a public injunctive claim in any forum, including arbitration.

20 Indeed, this was the very basis upon which McGill distinguished its holding from the 21 holdings in Broughton and Cruz. McGill, 2 Cal. 5th at 956 (Because the parties “preclud[ed]
22 McGill from seeking public injunctive relief . . . in any forum . . . the Broughton-Cruz rule — 23 which applies only when parties have agreed to arbitrate requests for such relief — is not at 24 issue.”). McGill acknowledged that a rule disfavoring arbitration would be impermissible under 25 the FAA. It held, however, that consistent with the Supreme Court’s interpretation of the FAA, 26 arbitration agreements, like other contracts, may be invalidated by generally applicable contract

27
28 ¹ Notably, Blair’s original complaint, drafted before the decision in McGill, did not seek injunctive relief for usury (see Dkt. 1 at 15). Only after McGill excepted from arbitration claims for public injunction did Blair add this remedy to her complaint.

1 defenses so long as those defenses “place arbitration agreements on an equal footing with other 2 contracts.” Id. at 962 (citing AT&T Mobility LLC v. Concepcion, 563 U.S. 333, 339 (2011)). A 3 contract precluding public injunctive relief in any forum falls within this ambit because it runs 4 afoul of the generally applicable contract defense that “a law established for a public reason 5 cannot be contravened by a private agreement.” Ibid.

6 Nor is Mortensen v. Bresnan Commc'ns, LLC, 722 F.3d 1151, 1161 n.14 (9th Cir. 2013)
7 of any help to RAC. In Mortensen, our court of appeals held that a Montana rule, which would 8 “bar the arbitration of entire categories of claims” was preempted by the FAA. The Montana 9 rule at issue in Mortensen provided that adhesion contracts, which waived the parties’ right to a 10 jury trial were unenforceable. This rule, by its very nature, included virtually all arbitration 11 agreements (though Montana courts created an exception for those agreements explained to and 12 initialed by consumers). Id. at 1161. Mortensen observed that such a rule clearly targeted, and 13 indeed was widely applied to arbitration agreements. Id. at 1161. Our court of appeals deemed 14 the rule unenforceable because, despite being framed as a rule of general applicability to 15 contracts, it was aimed at and would disproportionately invalidate arbitration provisions. Id. at 16 1160.

17 The rule in McGill, in contrast, provides that parties can compel public injunctive claims 18 to arbitration. It merely prohibits contracts that waive such claims altogether. McGill does not 19 violate the FAA’s prohibition on rules specifically disfavoring arbitration, and is therefore not 20 preempted by the FAA.

21 C. The Arbitration Agreement Impermissibly Precludes Public 22 Injunctive Relief.

23 The arbitration agreement would preclude Blair from bringing her Section 17200, 24 CLRA, and Karnette Rental-Purchase Act claims in any forum. Accordingly, that portion of the 25 arbitration agreement is invalid, and Blair may bring these claims in court, as now set forth in 26 detail.

27 The arbitration agreement provided that RAC may elect to arbitrate “claims that are 28 based on any legal theory whatsoever, including . . . any statute, regulation or ordinance” (Dkt.
No. 22-1 ¶ B). In the event that a party elects to arbitrate, as RAC has done here, the agreement

1 provided that arbitration “shall be conducted on an individual basis,” that the arbitrator was 2 prohibited from “award[ing] relief that would affect RAC account holders other than [the 3 customer],” and that “There will be no right or authority for any dispute to be brought, heard, or 4 arbitrated as a class, collective, mass, private attorney general, or representative action” (id. ¶ 5 D). In summary, once a party selects arbitration, the only form of relief a complainant is 6 permitted to pursue is individual relief (i.e. relief on behalf of oneself). RAC’s election to 7 arbitrate this dispute would therefore preclude Blair from seeking a public injunction in any 8 forum.

9 This is exactly the contractual limitation prohibited by McGill. Therefore, pursuant to 10 McGill, the agreement’s preclusion of claims seeking public injunctions is unenforceable.

11 RAC argues that even if the requirement of individual arbitration is unenforceable, the 12 merits of Blair’s claims should be decided by an arbitrator and then, if RAC is found liable, 13 Blair should petition the Court for public injunctive relief (Reply at 5). This procedure, 14 however, would not follow from the terms of the agreement itself. Pursuant to paragraph D, “If 15 there is a final judicial determination that applicable law precludes enforcement of [paragraph 16 D’s] limitations as to a particular claim for relief, then that claim (and only that claim) must be 17 severed from the arbitration and may be brought in court” (Dkt. No. 22-1 ¶ D) (emphasis 18 added).

19 RAC argues that “the reference . . . to ‘claims for relief’ simply meant that if the court 20 should find that any limitation to the arbitrator’s ability to award ‘relief’ or a remedy is 21 unenforceable, a request for that particular form of relief (or remedy) must be brought in court” 22 (Reply at 4). This is an unnatural and unpersuasive reading of the contract term. The 23 agreement plainly stated that an unenforceable claim must be severed from the contract and 24 decided in court, not a portion of a claim or a remedy (Dkt. No. 22-1 ¶ D). See Vargas v. Wells
25 Fargo Bank, N.A., No. C 12-02008 WHA, 2012 WL 2931220, at *6 (N.D. Cal. July 18, 2012)
26 (distinguishing a claim, which is the substantive legal theory, from a remedy); Cannon v. Wells
27 Fargo Bank N.A., 917 F. Supp. 2d 1025, 1031 (N.D. Cal. 2013) (Judge Edward Chen) 28 (“[E]quitable relief is not a claim for relief but rather only a remedy.”).

1 Here, three of Blair’s claims seek relief not permitted under the arbitration agreement.
2 That prohibition runs afoul of California law. Accordingly, her claims for violations of Section 3 17200, the CLRA, and the Karmette Rental-Purchase Act “must be severed from the arbitration 4 and may be brought in court” (see Dkt. No. 22-1 ¶ D). RAC’s motion to compel arbitration is 5 DENIED as to Blair’s Section 17200, CLRA and Karmette Rental-Purchase Act claims.

6 2. CLASS ACTION CLAIMS.

7 RAC further argues that the Court should strike Blair’s class allegations arising out of 8 the 2015 arbitration agreement because she agreed to waive class claims. It requests that the 9 class claims of any other individuals who signed the arbitration agreement likewise be stricken 10 (Br. at 15).

11 The agreement provides that “There will be no right or authority for any dispute to be 12 brought, heard, or arbitrated as a class” (Dkt. No. 22-1 ¶ D). This class action waiver provision, 13 therefore, applies not only to arbitration, but, as clearly stated, to any dispute between Blair and 14 RAC. Accordingly, RAC’s motion to strike Blair’s class action claims arising from her 2015 15 agreement is GRANTED. Pursuant to her agreement with RAC, Blair must bring these claims in 16 her individual capacity.

17 RAC’s motion to strike class action claims of any other individuals who signed the 18 arbitration agreement is not yet ripe because no other individuals who signed the agreement 19 have moved for relief, and therefore there are no other claims to strike. Accordingly, RAC’s 20 motion is DENIED insofar as it seeks to strike the class action claims of individuals not parties to 21 this litigation.

22 3. STAY?

23 RAC contends that any claims not sent to arbitration — including Blair’s claims related 24 to the 2016 purchase for which she opted out of arbitration, and other named plaintiffs’ claims 25 — should be stayed pending the outcome of arbitration. It first argues that these claims are 26 subject to a mandatory stay under Section 3 of the FAA, which provides:

27 If any suit or proceeding be brought in any of the courts of 28 the United States upon any issue referable to arbitration under an agreement in writing for such arbitration, the court in which such suit is pending, upon being satisfied that the

1 issue involved in such suit or proceeding is referable to 2 arbitration under such an agreement, shall on application of 3 one of the parties stay the trial of the action until such 4 arbitration has been had in accordance with the terms of the 5 agreement, providing the applicant for the stay is not in 6 default in proceeding with such arbitration.

7 The mandatory provision, however, only applies to arbitrable claims or issues. Leyva v.
8 Certified Grocers of Cal., Ltd., 593 F.2d 857, 863 (9th Cir. 1979); see also Winfrey v. Kmart
9 Corp., No. 16-55184, 2017 WL 2211276, at *1 (9th Cir. May 19, 2017). Therefore, it applies 10 only to Blair’s usury claim related to her 2015 purchase, which claim this order compels to 11 arbitration.

12 RAC further argues that this order should apply a discretionary stay as to all other 13 claims because moving forward with non-arbitrable claims risks litigating the same issues in the 14 arbitral and judicial forum, which will be burdensome on the parties and unnecessarily expend 15 judicial resources. See Leyva, 593 F.2d at 863–64.

16 Here, such a stay is unnecessary. RAC has succeeded in compelling only a single claim 17 to arbitration for violation of California’s usury law. The usury claim concerns only Blair’s 18 2015 purchase of her air conditioning unit, and whether the installment payments related to that 19 purchase constitute a loan, which exceeds the interest rate limit established by Article XV of the 20 California Constitution (see Sec. Amd. Compl. ¶¶ 99–100). The Karnette Rental-Purchase Act 21 claim, on the other hand, concerns whether RAC exceeded benchmark maximum prices for the 22 various items purchased by Blair, Robinson, and Harris, as well as RAC’s compliance with 23 labeling and record-keeping requirements set forth in the Act (id. ¶ 86). The CLRA claim also 24 carries a distinct legal concern — whether RAC’s contracts contain misleading or 25 unconscionable terms (id. ¶ 94). Finally, the Section 17200 claim is predicated on violations of 26 all of the above claims (id. ¶ 106). While there will no doubt be some minor overlap in the facts 27 in arbitration and in court, California’s usury law is sufficiently distinct from the other 28 consumer protection laws Blair sues under that parallel proceedings will not be unduly duplicative or burdensome. Accordingly, RAC’s motion to stay court proceedings is DENIED.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, RAC’s motion to compel arbitration is GRANTED as to Blair’s usury claim, and DENIED as to Blair’s claims under Section 17200 of the California Business and Professions Code, the Karnette Rental-Purchase Act, and the Consumer Legal Remedies Act. RAC’s motions to strike Blair’s class claims is GRANTED. RAC’s motion to stay is DENIED.
